In a fishing town in Cornwall, England, some of the houses in the narrow streets were in such a filthy condition from the negligence of those who occupied them, that the sanitary inspector considered it necessaary to require the inmates to move into an open field, many of whom were already sick of cholera; they immediately began to improve. Meanwhile, the houses were cleaned out, swept, washed, and then thoroughly whitewashed; but no sooner had the families moved in, than the disease began.

"Toilet Receptions" are the latest idea in New York fashionable society. Hair dressing has become such an elaborate affair, and occupies so much time, that belles now receive their callers while under the hands of their maids. At present, their intimates only are admitted, but the sex is not limited, and gentlemen are also received by madame in the most charming of combing toilets, with the sweetest of smiles and the prettiest of apologies for the situation.

The people were again removed to the field, to sleep and cook and eat in the open air, when the same prompt improvement in their condition was manifested. It seemed that although the houses were cleansed, the yards and gardens around had been the recipients of offal of various kinds so long that the very earth was saturated with the elements of disease.

Cases are recorded in standard. elements of disease.

Cases are recorded in standard medical books where whole families have been stricken with disease in a mary sickness of humanity. In the model lodging-houses, above referred to, about thirteen die out of a thousand, annually; while there are twenty-seven deaths among the surrounding inhabitants. In some portions of the British army, when sanitary officers are scientific and conscientious men only nine seventions. tions of the British army, when sanitary officers are scientific and conscientious men, only nine persons in a thousand died annually, and, in some of the best regulated prisons, in England, the death rate has been reduced to five in a thousand a year, but in these last instances there are no children. In ordinary cases of soldier or prison-life, in what may be called a "standing army" or barrack life, not more than twenty persons in a thousand should die in a year, because none sense they have nothing to do hat the standing army.

The wife of Capt. Vessels, living in Accomac County, Virginia, gave birth one day this week to two children, each having two heads, four eyes and three legs.

Domestic Cleanliness.
On one occasion, sickness prevailed in a family, which failed to obtain relief from any of the various remedies administered, but upon one of the panes of glass being broken, and not repaired, an immediate improvement became apparent, resulting in ultimate good health.

have been stricken with disease in a few days, and examination discovered that the house drains had given way, and emptied themselves partially into the well from which the family derived all its supplies of drinking and cooking water. This was also the case in two English prisons, causing within a day or two an epidemic dysentery throughout the establishment, which immediately ceased on a supply of better water.

The difference between cleanliness and the want of it, about a house, is from the former to strawberries and cream.

Among the numerous demands upon Gov. Moore, of Louisiana, from different portions of the country, for his autograph, is a very modest one from a young lady. Inclosed in her letter is a small octagonal piece of silk, which she desires the Governor to write his name upon, as she is getting up an "autograph quilt." There is no telling what strange bedfellows the Governor may find himself among before that quilt is taken from the former. fellows the Governor may find him-self among before that quilt is taken

The difference between cleanliness and the want of it, about a house, is demonstrated in some of the model lodging-houses in London, standing in the midst of unhealthful surroundings; for, in these houses, the number of deaths is just half as many as in the immediate neighborhood.

It may be well to know what is an excess of sickness or death in any locality. In the Isle of Wight, one of the healthiest places on the globe, in a promiscuous population, for every thousand persons, fourteen died in the course of a year, from the ordinary sickness of humanity. In the model lodging-houses, above referred vants. The affair will not be brought INDIAN COTTON.—India, perhaps, more than any other part of the world, is fitted to supply our markets with an abundant, good and cheap supply of cotton. Hitherto the quantity of this important staple that here found its way to Livarpool and has found its way to Liverpool and other principal ports has disappointed the anticipation of those best acquainted with its immense resources and capabilities; but when we consider the difficulties which had bringing into fashion colored six perticoats—some of these which are worn under dresses striped with gold, are also trimmed with gold fringe. The fringes which are now used for trimming petticoats are frequently feur inches deep.

The use of the eigarette at the dinner table by Parisian ladies is at length beginning to be a custom. They are to be provided with costly Sevres spittoons. Upon which an English writer asks: "But what can gloss over a vulgarity? Not even a gold spittoon set with diamonds, or the use of lace handkerchiefs at ten thousand france each."

Women are a great mystery. According to Haller, women be huncolly considerable increase has taken place in the quantity now imported from our Eastern Empire; and here we must, in justice, remark that this result is, in a great measure, if not altogether, attributed to the persistent exertions the Cotton Supply Association of Manchester have put forth to overcome the prejudices and natural conservatism of the native mind, and to stimulate both the large MONE KA,

TR and small proprietors to the cultiva-tion of the cotton plant wherever it could be grown with success. It has now been demonstrated satisfactorily that the land owners of India will, as elsewhere, give up the culture of t their accustomed crops where they find it profitable to do so, and if Agents June only the force of the soil is seconded by the use of modern agricultural, cleansing and pressing machinery, and the means of transport improved, we may confidently look to our possessions in the East ultimately standing at the head of the list as a source of supply.

In all these respects, however, India labors under very serious disadvantages. The culture of the plant is carried on in the most priplant is carried on in the most primitive manner, and with implements of the roughest and most autiquated character; the product is imperfectly cleaned; frequently no attempt whatever is made to subject it to effective and adequate pressure, and the means of transport and intercommunication are positively disgraceful. If we add to these drawbacks the fact that the article at present growth is mostly of inferior quality, simply because it is raised from inferior seed, we have a state of things presented deserving of the attention not merely of the mercantile community, but also of the Government.
